

SECTION 4
EIGHT PAGES

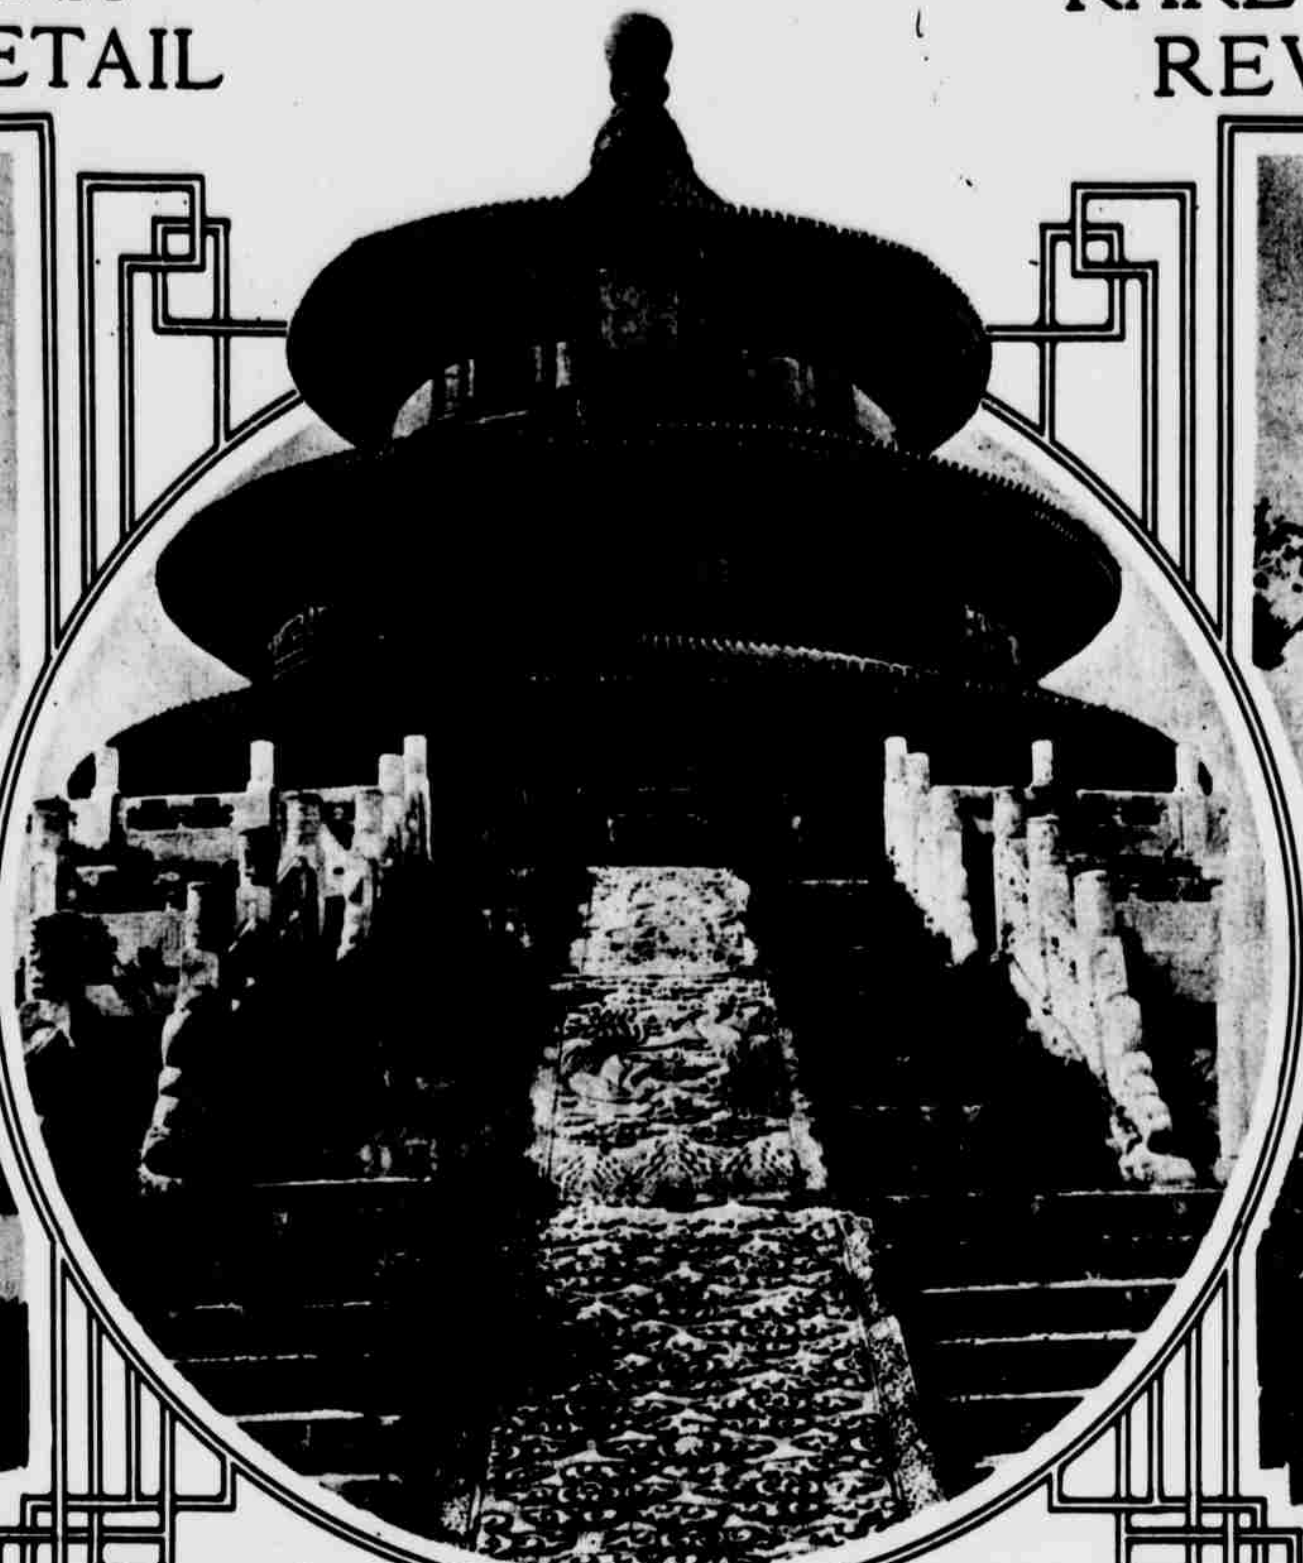

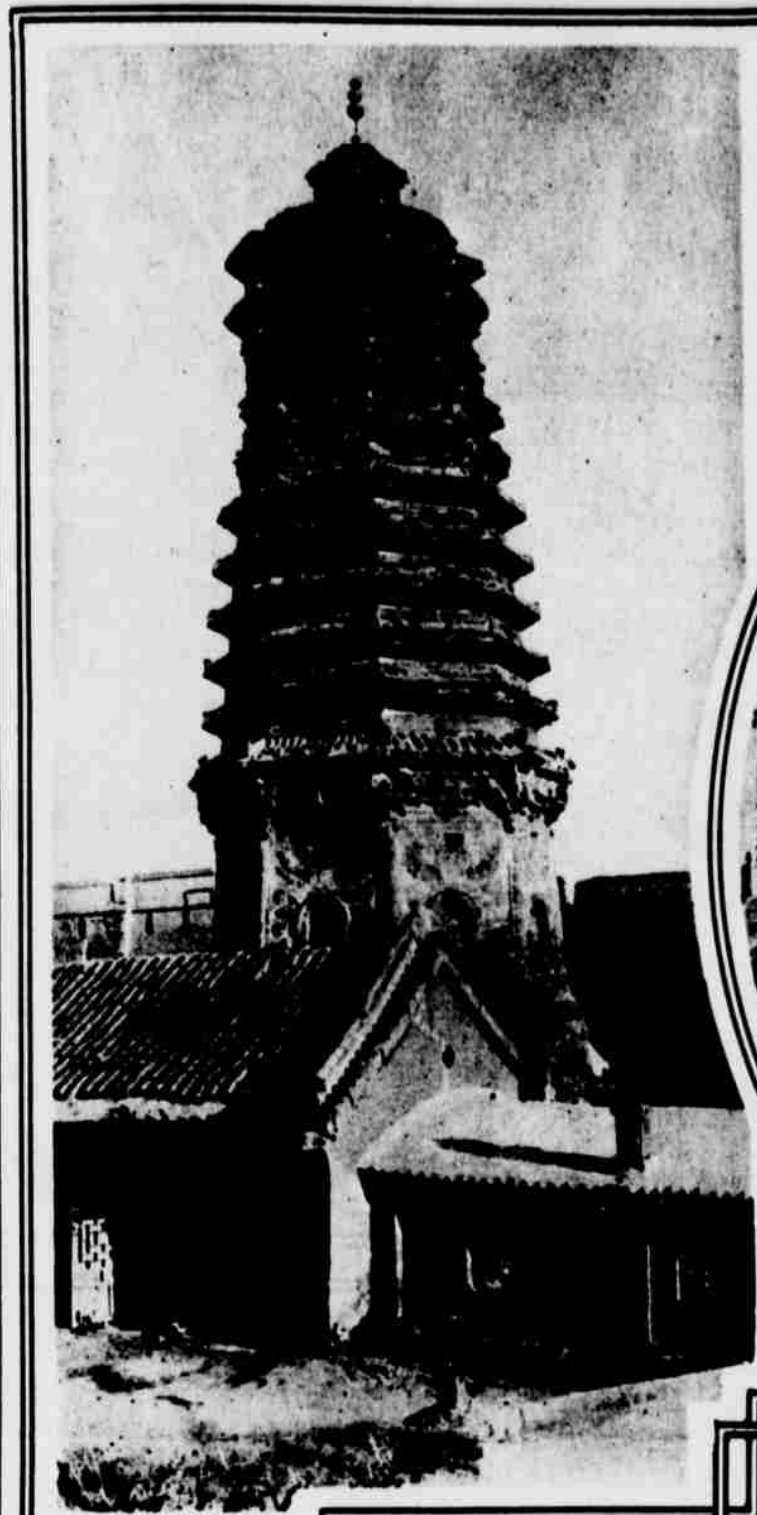

The Sun.

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1916.

PICTORIAL MAGAZINE

GLORIES OF CHINA
SHOWN IN DETAIL

RARE PHOTOGRAPHS
REVEAL MARVELS

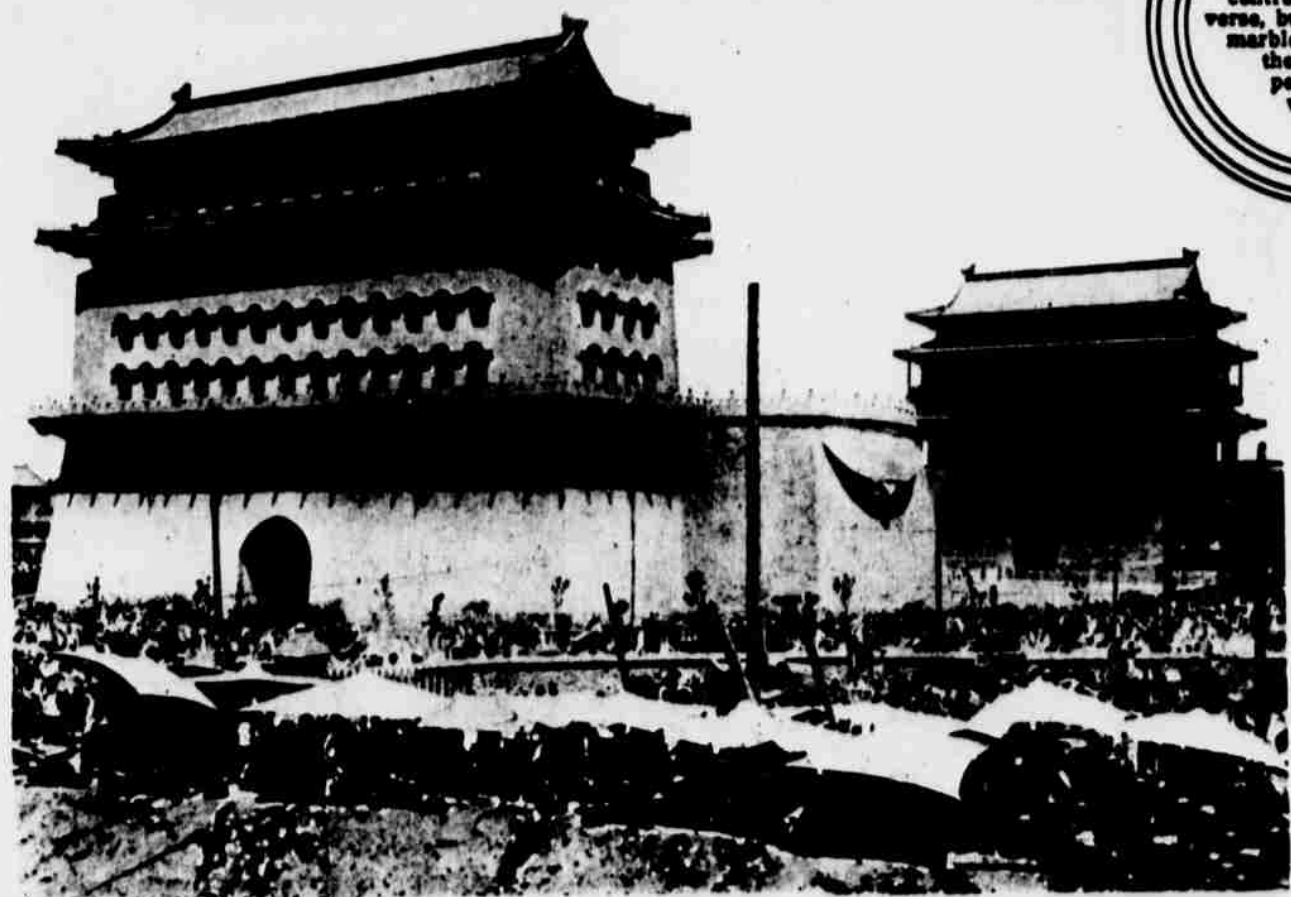

Temple of Heaven in Peking, made of marble intricately carved and of wood colored and preserved. The roofs are of purple tile as bright to-day as when built.

Llama tower in Mukden now more than 8,000 years old, well preserved and in daily use. Built in the first Manchu dynasty, its type survives to-day.

Another Llama tower in Mukden, crumbling on top, overgrown with grass and bushes, but its base beautiful despite ravages of centuries.

Altar of Heaven, considered the centre of the universe, built entirely of marble. Scene of the old Emperor's devotions.

Great water gate in Peking with the Chien-Mien gate in the background. American troops have controlled it since the Boxer uprising, the relief force entering the city by this route.

Ornamental pylon outside the water gate showing the varied and constant traffic. Electric light and telephone wires make a striking contrast with its ancient outline and curious inscriptions.

Photographs on this page copyrighted by Newman Traveltalks and Brown & Dawson, New York.